ARRESTED MAN WHO STOLE CLOTH STOLEN FROM GLEN WOOLEN MILL

The arrest of Mrs. Carmelia Lumbrellia of 330 Franklin street here Thursday afternoon and the recovery of a quantity of cloth such as was stolen from the Glen Woollen mill at Norwich Town on the night of Dec. 31st last developed a new link that may lead to the detection of the woolen mill burglars.

The cloth recovered has all been identified by the Glen Woollen mill people as coming from their mill and Mrs. Lumbrellia has confessed, according to the police, that she sold it in Norwich on Monday day.

Winter to eight different Italian families in this city.

She denies having any knowledge that the cloth was stolen. At the time of the Glen Woollen mill burglary she was living in Groton, but she moved here about two months ago somewhere around the time that Patsy Caboni of Groton was arrested on suspicion of being connected with the Glen Woollen mill burglary.

According to what Mrs. Lumbrellia told the Norwich police after her arrest the cloth she sold in Norwich came from Groton for that purpose, was brought to her by two men who were boarders at her home in Groton. She says they told her they got it at a bankrupt sale and she was to keep it for them. She sold it all for $75, she says, and gave the men the money. They gave her nothing and they have since gone away without paying their board. She cannot tell where they are and knows them only by the names of Mike and Patsy. She says her husband is in New York.

Ever since the night in December when burglars got into the Glen Woollen mill, but were scared away as they were loading up an automobile with cloth stolen from the mill, the Norwich police have kept persistently at work on the case with the feeling that they would run across the trail of the thieves and the cloth that the men carry with them. About a week ago they got knowledge of a family that had bought some woolen cloth and this line of search unearthed yet other families in the city where cloth had been sold until the pieces in all were discovered and it was learned who had made the sales.

Thursday afternoon the net was closed with the arrest of Mrs. Lumbrellia and the various lots of woolen cloth were recovered from the families who were holding them. In one case a pair of trousers had been made from the cloth, but in the others it was still in the original pieces.

Officer Ralph Diveto arrested Mrs. Lumbrellia at a Greenview mill where she was at work, and she was brought to police headquarters and questioned by Chief George Linton.

After the questioning she was locked up in the woman's room at police headquarters.

The location of the stolen cloth stands to the credit of the Norwich police as a reward for their persistent work in following up the woolen mill burglary as the men who robbed the mill got away without leaving any trace of who they might be and it is by keeping everlastingly at it that the local officers have been able to pick up the trail that seems likely to solve the mystery of the woolen mill and possibly bring them before the court for prosecution.

The case against Patsy Caboni is still in the book at police headquarters, having been continued from time to time.

FACTORY WOMEN WAGES

AVERAGE $16.50 TO $22

The average wage of the women working in the factories of Connecticut varies from $15.50 to $22 a week, according to Charlotte M. Holloway, industrial investigator for the department of labor and factory inspection.

The lowest pay for skilled and semi-skilled labor among the working women of the Connecticut factories varies from $15.50 to $18.50 a week.

Among the women working in textile factories receive as low as $9 a week, but even this is not much lower than the average wage of the women workers in New York state, it has been found after careful investigation that the average wage of the working women of the state is about $10 a week.

In no individual case in Connecticut has it been found that a woman is receiving as low as $7 a week, although there were a number of such cases in New York state.

The above facts were obtained at the request of the state labor board and factory inspection in Hartford where statistics are being compiled for a report to be presented to the governor and the legislature in the fall.

The investigation shows that the employees displayed a willingness to aid the investigators this year that has never been shown before. Owing to this, a number of interesting facts have been obtained and it was said at the offices of the department that the report would be much more interesting to the public than any previous one.

Taking the condition of the women employed in Connecticut factories as a whole, the conditions are much better than they are in any other state. Every woman who has any desire for employment can find it, and the demand for labor of all kinds is rapidly increasing. Manufacturers are so pressed for help that even young women who are being employed against the will of the majority of the factory owners. Consequently this increased demand for help is raising the wages proportionately, and at the same time the cost of living has risen from 10 per cent. to 40 per cent. higher than they were, even during the war days.

The statistics were gathered from the large manufacturers of the state, the smaller employers being exempted, as the questions were applicable only to the larger factories. Wages are from 60 per cent. to 70 per cent. higher than was indicated in the report of 1917.

In the report that is being compiled at present, a new section will be included, telling of conversations investigators had had on the high cost of living with people who are employed in state factories. From investigations made so far it has been found that even with the wages rising as they are they do not keep up with the rising cost of living. A number of families among the foreign classes were found to be undernourished, not always because of lack of money, but because they were not getting the higher prices that they would not pay for produce and are trying to put money away. The installment plan of buying clothes is popular among the girls working in factories, although it has been found to be unsatisfactory from many standpoints by investigators.

Figures from the present census of factory workers show that the number of girls under 18 who are working in factories is on the decrease when compared with former reports, while the number between the ages of 16 and 18 is on the increase. The number between 20 and 50 years of age is very near the same as in former reports, while there are a great many men and women between the ages of 50 and 60 supporting themselves. There is a decrease in the number of married women employed when compared with the last report, but the number still exceeds those who were working when the census was taken for 1915 and 1918.

In the Rosario district, Argentina, there are 183 prosperous flour mills. The industry is dominated by three powerful companies. Argentine flour competes with flour from the United States in the markets of Brazil.
